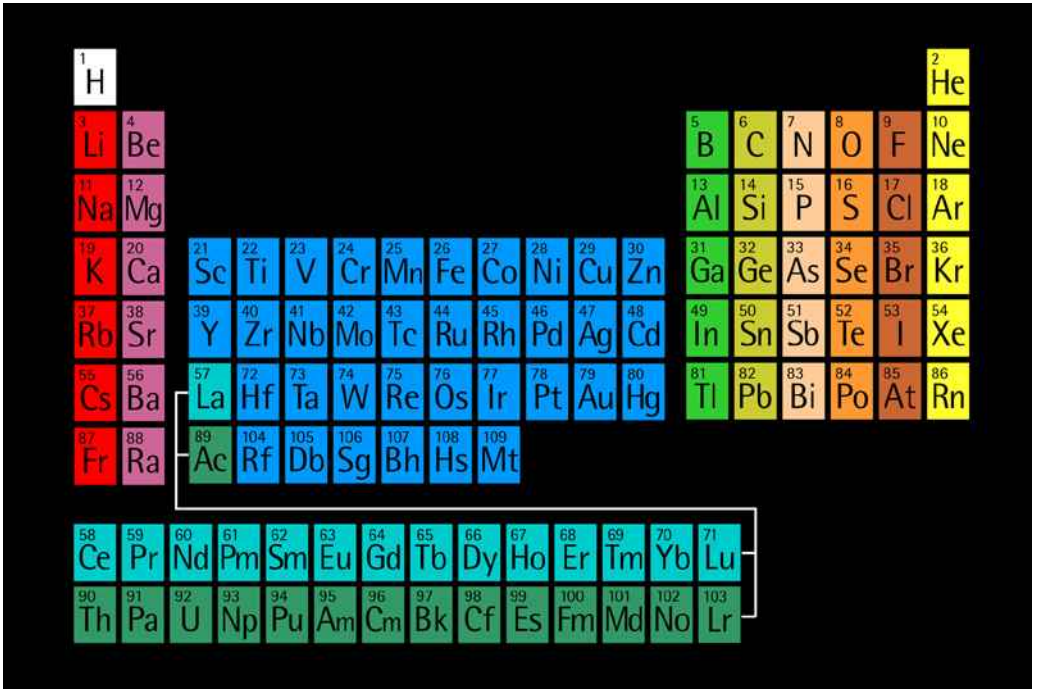
Web watch

The Guardian

online

Thursday July 15 1999



Art table

In an unusual collaborative project Royal Society of Chemistry in London has created a visual periodic table of the elements in which artists respond to an element - its history, discovery and properties. The computer-generated artwork, some of it animated, is called 109 for the number of elements in the table. The site includes downloadable details on each element.

You can see 109 online at www.chemsoc.org/viselements/and order a printed version.