Supplemental Information:

Sensitive and specific detection of a new β-agonist brombuterol in tissue and feed samples by a competitive polyclonal antibody based ELISA

Haijing Du\textsuperscript{a}, Yanxin Chu\textsuperscript{a}, Hong Yang\textsuperscript{b}, Kang Zhao\textsuperscript{a}, Jianguo Li\textsuperscript{a}, Pei She\textsuperscript{a}, Xiang Zhang\textsuperscript{a}, Anping Deng\textsuperscript{a}

\textsuperscript{a}The Key Lab of Health Chemistry & Molecular Diagnosis of Suzhou, College of Chemistry, Chemical Engineering & Materials Science, Soochow University, Renai Road 199, Suzhou 215123, China

\textsuperscript{b}College of Pharmacy Sciences, Soochow University, Suzhou, 215123, China

* Corresponding author: Tel: +86 512 65884630; Fax: +86 512 65884630
e-mail: yanghong@suda.edu.cn; lijgsd@suda.edu.cn; denganping@suda.edu.cn
Fig. S1 The chromatograms of the HPLC for brombuterol detection from spiked feed samples. (a) unspiked samples (the arrow indicates the point brombuterol peak appeared); (b) sample spiked with brombuterol at 10 ng·g\(^{-1}\) level.