Supporting Information

Protein assisted hydrothermal synthesis of ultrafine magnetite nanoparticle built-porous oriented fibers and their structurally enhanced adsorption to toxic chemicals in solution

Chengliang Han¹,², Weiping Cai¹*, Tang Wei¹, Guozhong Wang¹ and Changhao Liang¹.

¹Key Laboratory of Materials Physics, Anhui Key Laboratory of Nanomaterials and Nanotechnology, Institute of Solid State Physics, Chinese Academy of Sciences, Hefei, 230031, P. R. China.
²Department of Chemical and Material Engineering, Hefei University, Hefei 230022, PR China

Fig.S1 Chengliang Han, et al

Figure S1. Photo of precursor solutions in bottle (1) with PR and bottle (2) without PR. One laser beam passes through two bottles from the right.

* To whom all correspondence should be addressed
E-mail: wpcai@issp.ac.cn
Figure S2. Morphological evolution of the magnetite with pH values in the precursor solution. (A): pH=4-5; (B): pH=9-10; (C): pH=11-12. The insets: the local magnified images.
Figure S3. FESEM images of the as-prepared products obtained at different reaction temperatures for 24h. (A): 220°C, (B): 240°C (pH value in solution is 7-8)
Figure S4. Product morphological evolution with the molar ratio of $\text{C}_6\text{H}_5\text{O}_7^{3-}$ to $\text{Fe}^{3+}$. (A): 0.5: 1, (B): 1: 1, (C): 4: 1, (D): 6: 1.