Synopsis

Huge amounts of food are wasted along the chain from farm, through storage and processing, to retailers and finally consumers. Some estimates put the figure as high as 50%. Reducing food waste would relieve some of the pressure to increase the area of land used for agriculture. It would also have significant environmental benefits. Speakers at this conference will discuss the current situation with respect to food waste and initiatives to address the problem in the UK and across the world, from 'farm to fork'. Some particular projects being undertaken by universities, research institutes, retailers and other organisations will be showcased to illustrate progress and opportunities available.

Attendees

The conference will prove of interest to all of those involved in the agri-food chain from research to retail with particular interest in waste.

Call for posters

Posters are invited from PhD and post-doctoral researchers. These should be in A0 portrait format. Please summarise your poster in about 300 words and send this to conferences@soci.org by 5 February 2013. Prizes will be awarded.
