Most indium is used to make indium tin oxide, an important component of touch screen devices.

Indium is used to coat the ball bearings in some Formula 1 cars due to its low friction coefficient.

Indium alloys with low melting points are used in shop and warehouse fire sprinkler systems.