

Supporting Information

HIGH RESOLUTION FTIR IMAGING PROVIDES AUTOMATED
DISCRIMINATION AND DETECTION OF SINGLE MALARIA
PARASITE INFECTED ERYTHROCYTES ON GLASS

David Perez-Guaita¹, Dean Andrew², Philip Heraud¹, Jack Richards^{2,3,4}, James Beeson^{2,3,4}, David Anderson², Bayden R. Wood^{1}*

¹ Centre for Biospectroscopy, Monash University, Clayton, 3800, Victoria, Australia

² Centre for Biomedical Research, Burnet Institute, Melbourne, Victoria, Australia

³Department of Microbiology, Monash University, Clayton, Victoria, Australia

⁴Department of Medicine, University of Melbourne, Parkville, Victoria, Australia

Figure 1S: Infrared and visible images of cells selected for the PLSDA analysis performed on section 3.3. The cells in this case were selected by hand and not using the automated cell selection routine.

