

Supplementary information

Title:

Construction of hollow MOF with high sedimentation performance and co-immobilization of multi-enzyme for preparing rare ginsenoside CK

Authors:

Shanshan Cao¹, Runze Li¹, Fei Tian¹, Xiaochen Liu¹, Daidi Fan², Zhansheng Wu^{1*}

Affiliations and Corresponding Author:

1.School of Environmental and Chemical Engineering, Xi'an Key Laboratory of Textile Chemical Engineering Auxiliaries, Xi'an Polytechnic University, Xi'an 710048, China;

2.School of Chemical Engineering, Shaanxi Bio-materials and Fermentation Engineering Technology

* Corresponding author: Zhansheng Wu, Tel: 86029 62779279, Fax: 86029 62779281.

Email address: wuzhans@xpu.edu.cn.

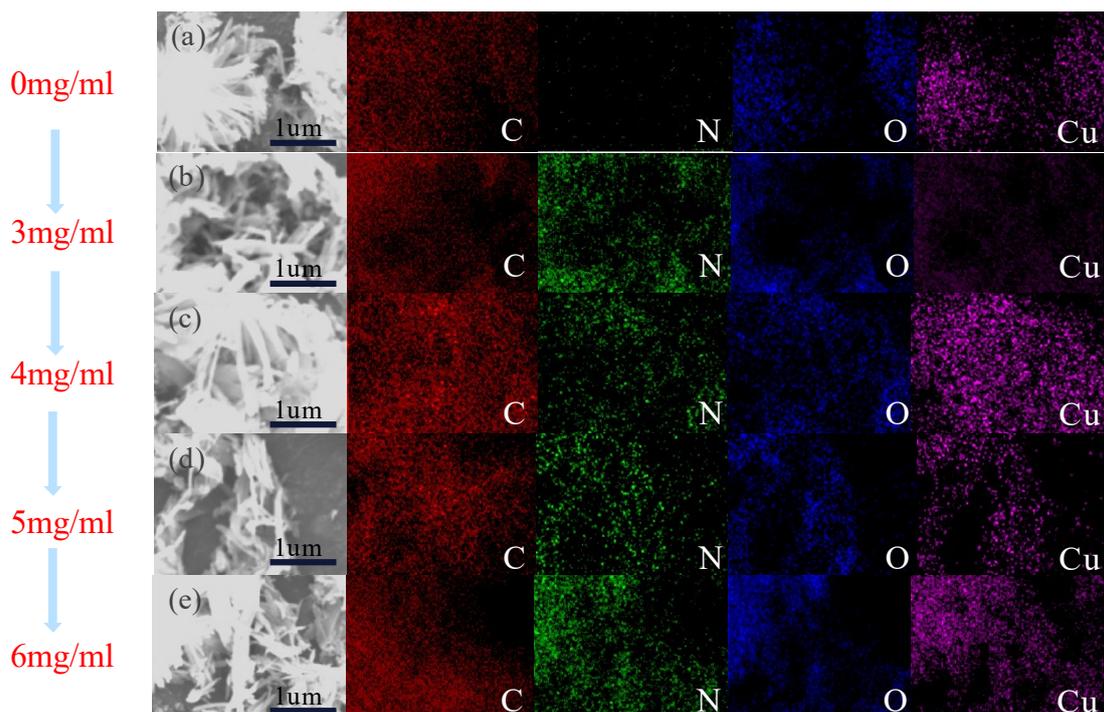

Fig. S1. SEM images and EDS elemental mapping images of Sn α & β -G@Cu²⁺-NaDC hydrogels (a-e) with varying protein concentrations (0, 3, 4, 5 and 6 mg/mL).

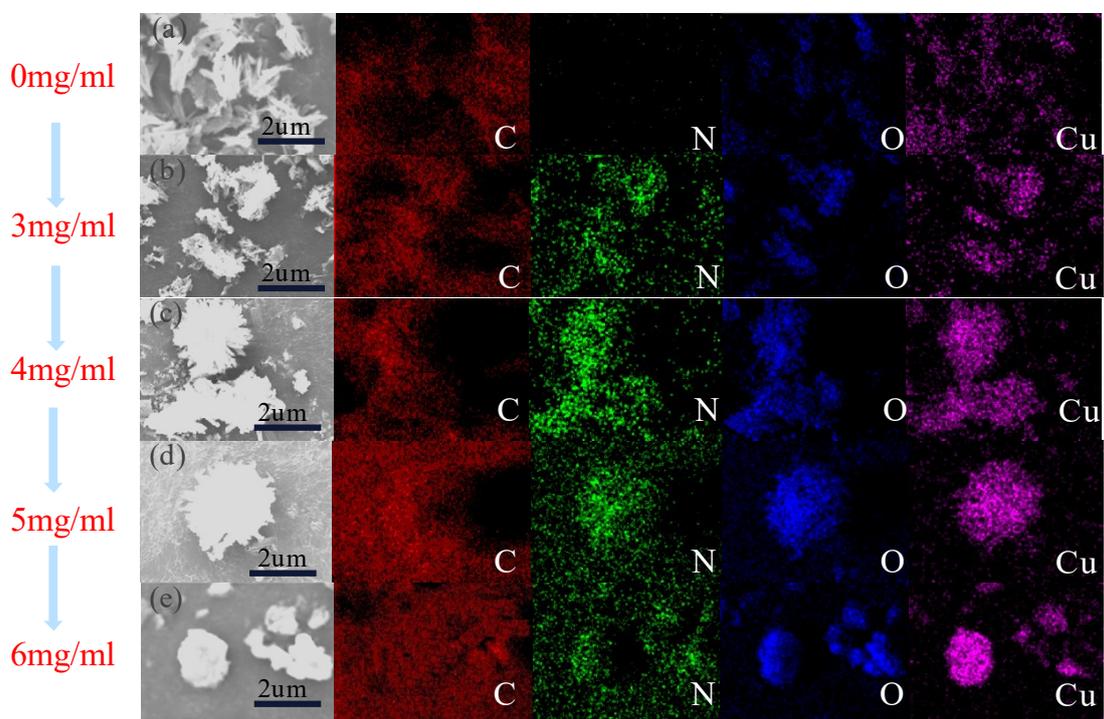

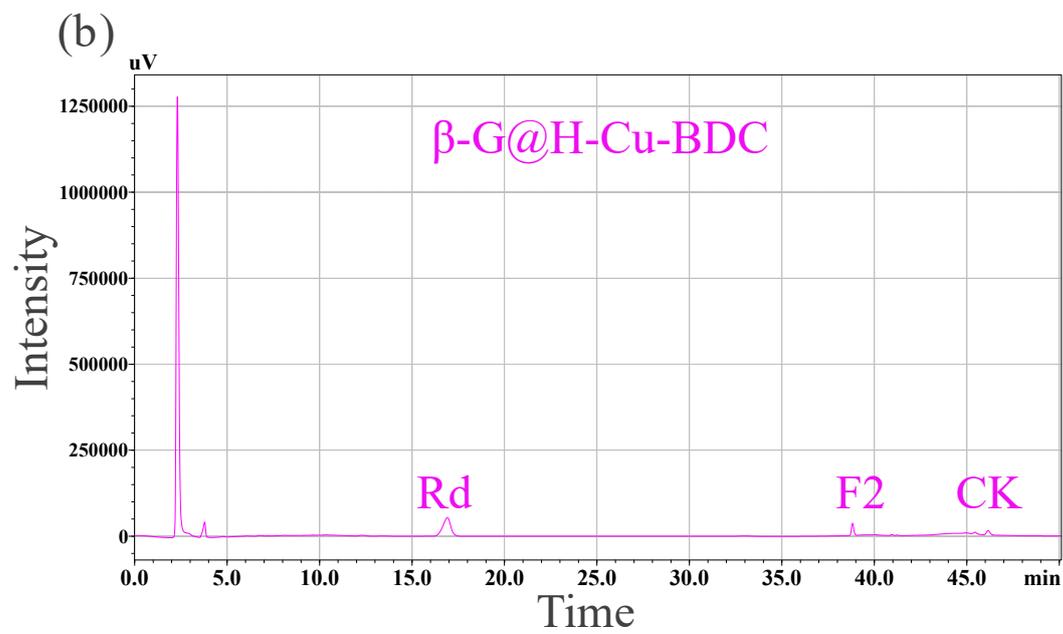

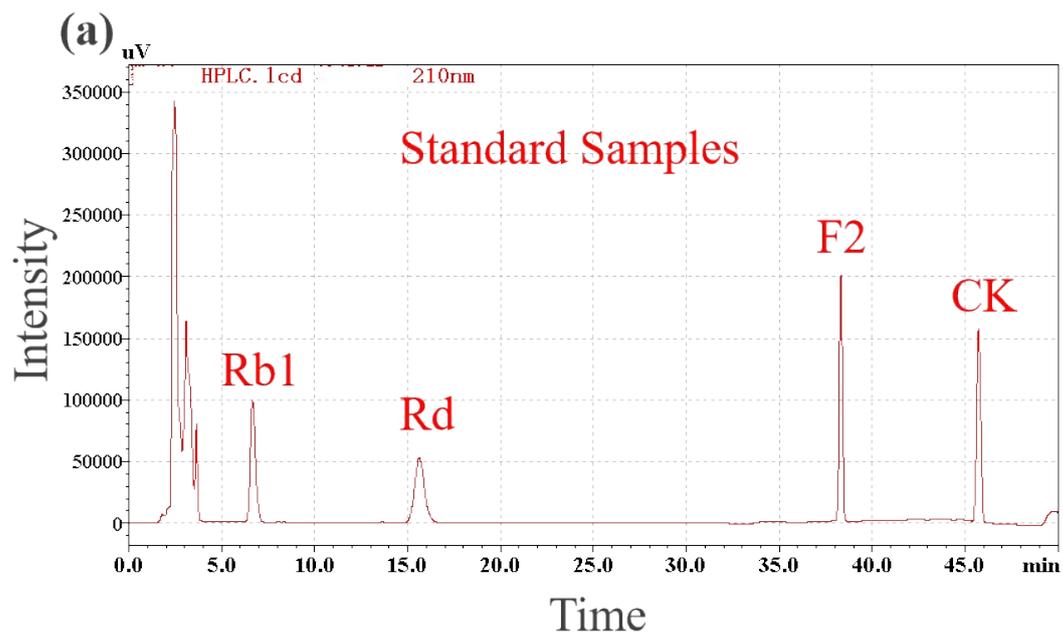

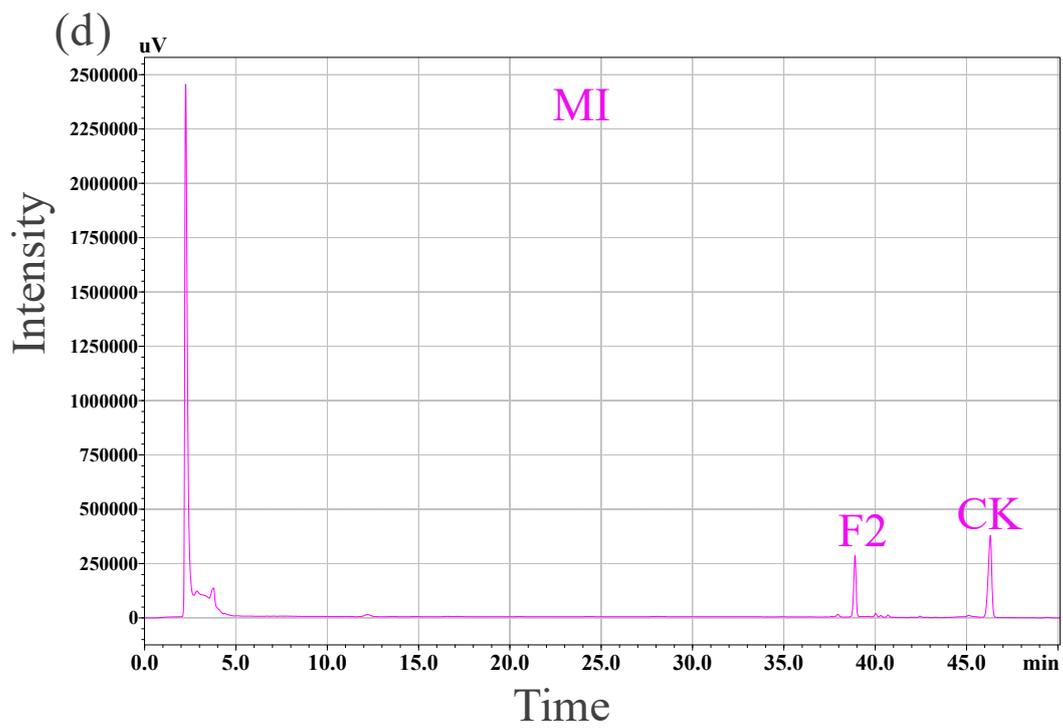

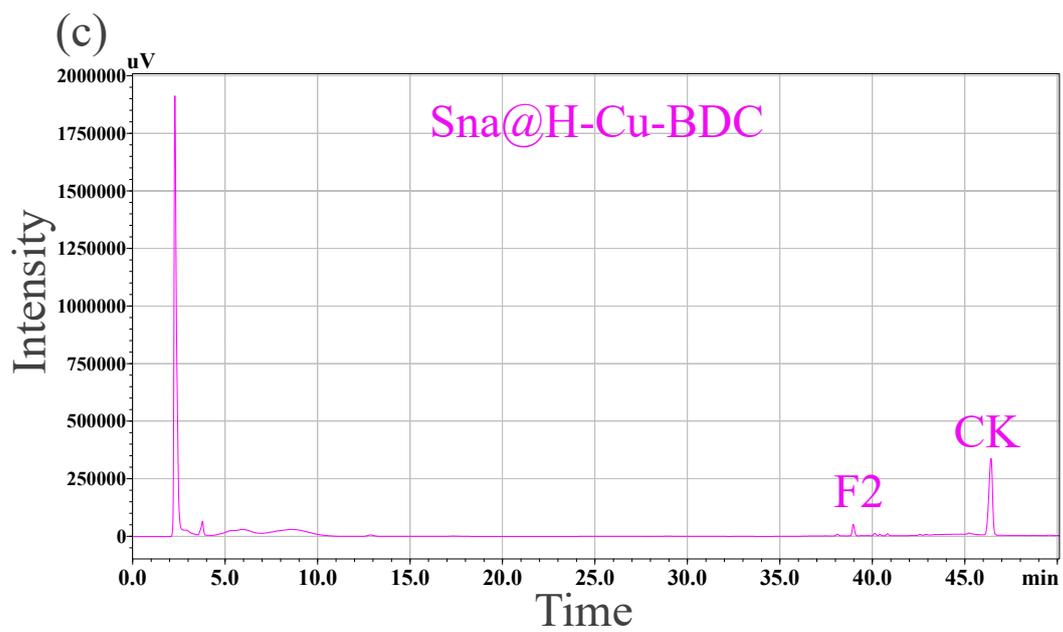

Fig. S2. SEM images and EDS elemental mapping images of Sn α & β -G@H-Cu-BDC biocomposites (a-e) with varying protein concentrations (0, 3, 4, 5 and 6 mg/mL).

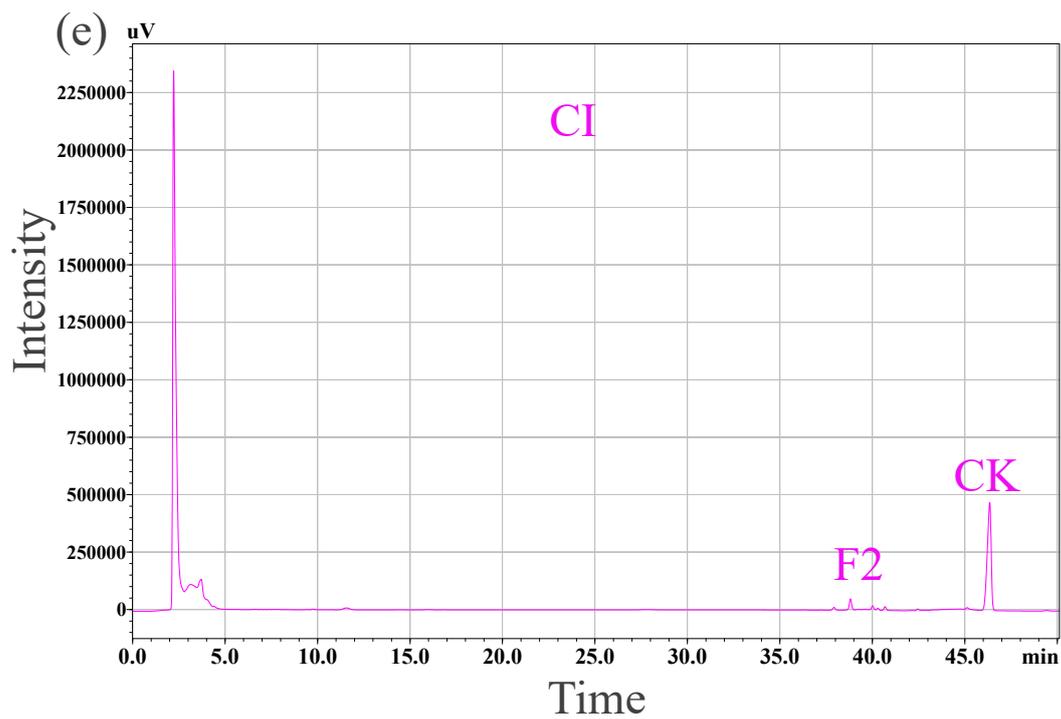

Fig.S3. HPLC chromatogram of the standard samples of ginsenoside Rb1, Rd, F2 and CK (a) and conversion products of Rb1 by β -G@H-Cu-BDC (b), Sna@H-Cu-BDC(c), MI (d) and CI (e) at Ph=4.5, 50 °C, the ratio of Rb1 to immobilized enzyme of 1:2 for 48 h.