Supporting information

Recent advance in optical sensors for microcystin-LR: from recognition elements to signal transduction

Heng Dai[a,1], Jun Liu[b,1], Shanlin Wang[c], Bin Wang[a], Tianhan Kai[a], Pian Wu[a*], Ping Ding[a*]

[a] Xiangya School of Public Health, Central South University, Changsha, Hunan, 410013, China

[b] University of South China, Hengyang, Hunan, 421001, China

[c] Guangzhou Customs District, Guangzhou, Guangdong, 510470, China

[1] Heng Dai and Jun Liu contributed equally to this work.

[*]Corresponding authors: wupian@csu.edu.cn (P, Wu), pingshui@csu.edu.cn (P, Ding).

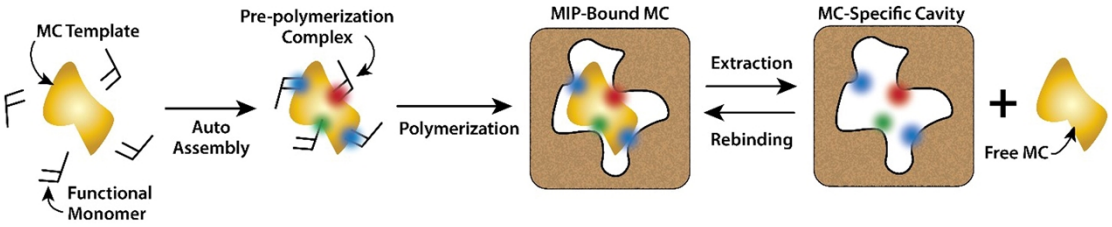

Fig. S1. Fundamental steps involving the synthetic imprinting of a polymer to form a MIP.[1]

Reference:

1. P. Fernando, M. W. Glasscott, K. Pokrzywinski, B. M. Fernando, G. K. Kosgei and L. C. Moores, Crit. Rev. Anal. Chem., 2022, 52, 1244-1258.