

Supplementary Information

Structural and Bactericidal Properties of Imidazolium Ionic Liquid-based Micelles of Thyme Essential Oil

Salma Mokni^a, Walid M. Hassen^a, Mayank^a, Narinder Singh^b, Jan J. Dubowski^{a*}

^aInterdisciplinary Institute for Technological Innovation (3IT), Quantum Semiconductors and Photon-based BioNanotechnology Group, Laboratoire Nanotechnologies Nanosystèmes (LN2)-IRL3463, CNRS, Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering, Université de Sherbrooke, 3000, boul. de l'Université, Sherbrooke, Québec J1K 0A5, Canada.

^bDepartment of Chemistry, Indian Institute of Technology Ropar, Punjab 140001, India

*Address correspondence to jan.j.dubowski@usherbrooke.ca (submitting author)

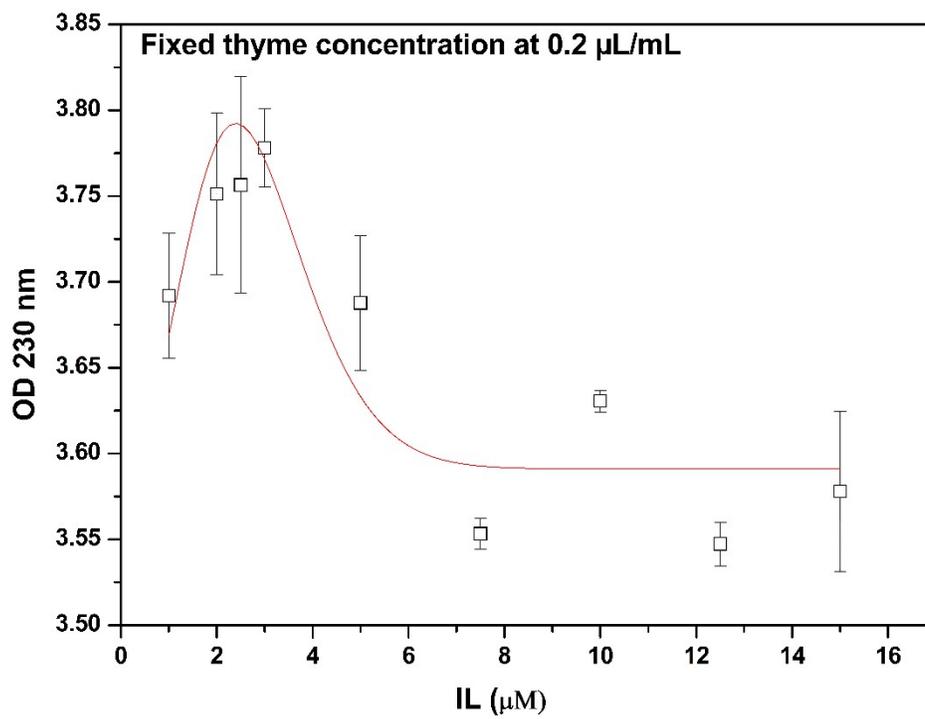

Figure S1. Optical density at 230 nm for solutions with different concentrations of IL and a fixed concentration of thyme essential oil.

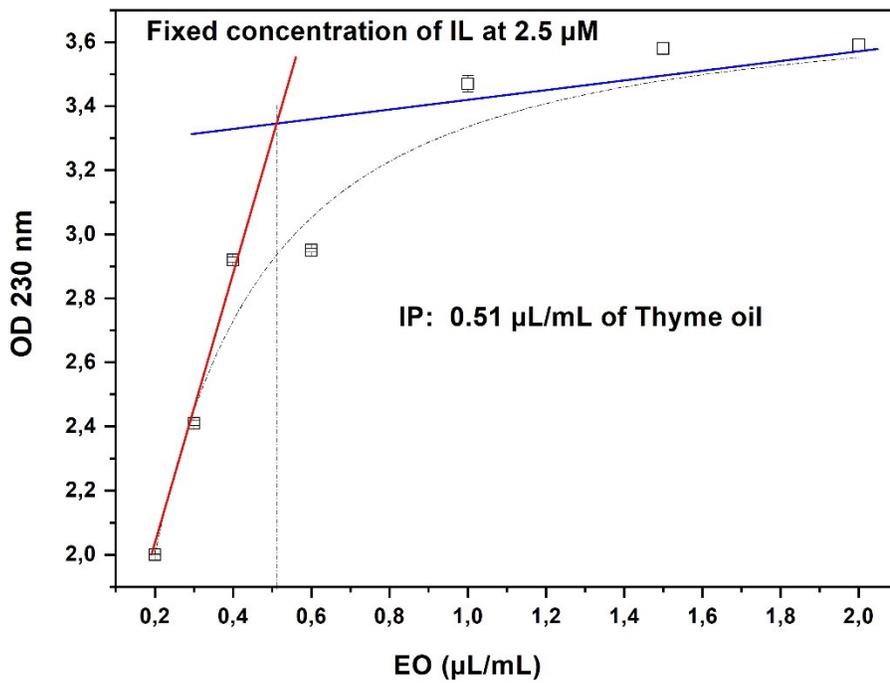

Figure S2. Optical density at 230 nm of solutions with different concentrations of thyme essential oil and a fixed concentration of IL. The inflection point is related to critical micelle concentration.